

What's behind our surgery Ratings

The Ratings on the following pages look at how hospitals nationwide compare in avoiding adverse events in Medicare patients during their hospital stay for surgery. Specifically, the Ratings are based on the percentage of a hospital's surgery patients who died in the hospital or stayed longer than expected for their procedure. Research shows those measures are correlated with complications, and some hospitals themselves use this approach to monitor quality. To develop the Ratings, we worked with MPA, a health care consulting firm with expertise in analyzing billing claims and clinical records data and in helping hospitals use the information to improve patient safety. The analysis looked at Medicare claims data from 2009 through 2011 for patients undergoing 27 categories of common scheduled surgeries. For each hospital, the results for all procedures are combined into an overall surgery Rating. In addition, we have Ratings for five of those procedures on our website (ConsumerReports.org/hospitalratings): back surgery, replacement of the hip or knee, and surgery to remove blockages in arteries in the heart (angioplasty) or neck (carotid artery surgery). The rates are risk-adjusted based on patient characteristics, such as age, gender, and other health conditions, including high blood pressure and diabetes. The Ratings don't take into account complications that became apparent after patients were discharged from the hospital. We have Ratings for the 2,463 U.S. acute-care or critical-access hospitals with sufficient Medicare fee-for-service in-patient surgical claims data from patients 65 and older.

We don't have Ratings for Veterans Affairs hospitals and hospitals that see mostly Medicare Advantage patients, such as many Kaiser hospitals, because they use another reporting system. The hospitals shown below are organized by state and listed by their Rating. Hospitals with the same Rating are alphabetized. For a full description of our methodology, as well as more information on hospitals, go to ConsumerReports.org/hospitalratings.
